St. Mark's Church, Mill Cove

Dear Friends in Christ,

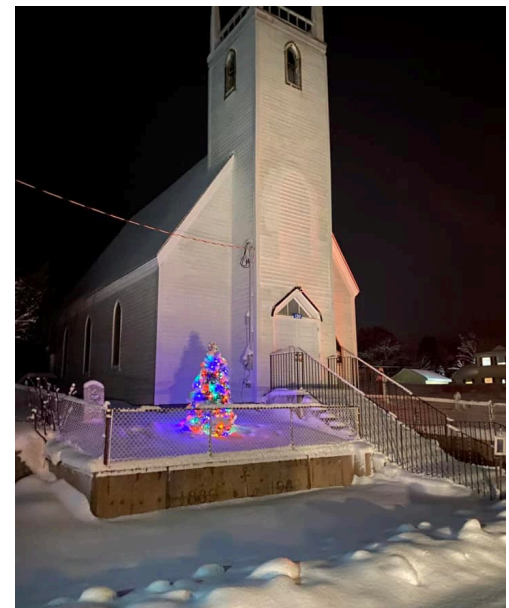

As we approach the end of our Lenten Season and prepare for Eastertide, it brings me great joy to once again write to you as your priest in charge. This time of ending one thing and beginning a new thing is transitional and can seem both ordinary and exciting at the same time. In one sense this is a transition that happens every year and we celebrate it in ways that have become our tradition, whether longstanding or new tradition. In another sense there is anticipation and anxiety mixed together as we consider what the new season will bring. Your parish continues to be in a time of transition as you leave one season of ministry and prepare for the next. What the new season will bring is unclear for now however, with faith and careful attention there is the potential for new things to grow and for existing things to be nourished and revitalized.

I want to thank everyone who has provided feedback through recent surveys and through conversation. I continue to learn more about your parish and the communities it serves, trusting that God will enable and inspire me to guide you into the next season of ministry. Transitions can often last longer than we anticipate and that can be frustrating so I am grateful for you patience and your continued discernment throughout this time. I hope that a way forward will soon become clearer and that we can enter into this new season with joy and excitement. Until that time, we move forward in faith the same way the first disciples did, not entirely sure what was to come but knowing that that the news and teaching that they had to share was worthy of their time, energy and commitment.

In Christ's service,
Archdeacon Brieanna Andrews
